The Lilies of the Field William E. Barrett

The Lilies of the Field by William E. Barrett, Doubleday & Company, 1962, First Edition, First Printing. The book is silver paper over green cloth with silver lettering on the spine. The dust jacket has been placed in an archival, clear, Mylar jacket for further protection and preservation. This is a Very Nice Reading Copy! The Haunting Miracle of a Humble Man and Four Nuns who Built a Little Church. A Poignant and Passionate Story of Change. Homer Smith was twenty-four. He stood six foot two and his skin was a deep, warm black. There was laughter in him. After leaving the army he bought a second-hand station wagon, equipped it for sleeping and living, and set off to see the west. That was how he came to drive by the field where four German nuns were working. One was clearing an area of cultivated land, three more were building a fence. For some obscure reason Homer Smith stopped to help - and that's where the drama began. With these simple circumstances William E. Barrett has written a novelette which has all the emotional and spiritual force of a full novel. There is significance without preaching, faith enveloped with humor. The result is a story of magnitude because of its very simplicity. This story was made into a Film starring Sidney Portier, for which he won an Academy Award for Best Actor. A WONDERFUL Work of ART!
