Jodi Madsen agrees to go to the Calgary Stampede with her Canadian friend Becky to take a break from the tension at her advertising job in Seattle—not to meet a cowboy, as Becky had teased. But when two huge Percherons start backing up on either side of her in the heavy horse barn, Jodi is happy to have handsome cowboy Sam McKenzie slap them back into their stalls. Then Jodi and Becky find themselves invited to the heavy horse ball. They accept as a lark, but while dancing with Sam, Jodi is surprised to find this is not how she expected to feel about a cowboy. She prefers professional men in suits who live in the same city as she does, but this Canadian cowboy might make her change her mind about that when he shows up a few weeks later in Seattle in a way she never could have imagined.
